2. Izumo Grand Shrine & Shimane museum of ancient Izumo

Izumo Taisha, located in eastern Shimane Prefecture, is one of the oldest Shinto shrines dedicated to Okuninushi-no-mikoto, which is popularly known as the deity of nation building and good marriage. The main hall, which is designated as a National Treasure, is half the height of the original 48 meters and is well known for its great roof made of cypress bark. This sacred hall was last rebuilt in 1744 in Japan's earliest style of Shinto architecture called "Taisha-zukuri."

Izumo has been the site of many important ancient Japanese historical discoveries. From 1984 till 1985, 358 bronze swords were excavated at the Kojindani Site. The number of swords discovered at this one site alone exceeds the total number of bronze swords excavated throughout the whole of Japan to date. Then in 1996, 39 bronze vessels(bronze bells) were excavated at the Kamoiwakura Site. This number of vessels is the largest number excavated from a single site in Japan. These bronze implements are thought to have been used in the religious festivals and are evidence that the Gods festivals in Izumo were regarded as highly significant. In the year 2000 ,the pillar which supported the main hall of the Izumo Grand Shrine in the 13th century was excavated. This pillar was made of three logs, 1.3 meters in diameter, and bound together, making it over 3 meters across in diameter. As one legend states, the Izumo Grand Shrine was a huge wooden structure reaching a height of 48 meters.

This discovery indicates the high possibility that this legend is based on a fact. The Shimane Museum of Ancient Izumo was established to introduce this unique history and culture to people both at home and abroad through exhibitions and so on.
